UPPER AND LOWER FORT GARRY: YESTERDAY

The Red River region, especially the forks of the Red and Assiniboine Rivers became the centre of the western fur trade in the late eighteenth century. It was here that traders, canoeing south and east along the great trade routes could sell or trade their furs for goods and provisions. From the east, across the continent, Company men brought trading goods to the settlement and carried back furs destined for European markets. The forks were the centre for the bison hunt and pemmican -- dried, pulverized bison meat fed the platoons of traders and was the first staple of the prairie economy. Here, settlers, eking out a meagre living on narrow strip farms along both river banks, purchased supplies and sold their produce.

Yet, in 1831, Hudson's Bay Company Governor, George Simpson, began construction on a Lower Fort, twenty-seven miles north of the junction of the Red and Assiniboine.

Simpson's attempt to shift business from the forks to the Lower Fort was a failure. The junction was the established social and economic centre for the settlement and the two thousand odd hardy citizens were content to do business there. An Upper Fort Garry was built on this site in 1837, becoming official Company headquarters and administrative centre of the fur trade.

Both Forts flourished, The Lower Fort becoming an agricultural and provisioning centre for the northern trade, while the Upper Fort continued to be the social and commercial centre of the settlement.

But political and economic conditions changed with the passage of years. Following Manitoba's entrance into Confederation and the arrival of the railroad which brought masses of immigrants searching for new homelands, the nature of commerce altered in the newly-born Province. The rivers could no longer compete with the railway in moving goods and people efficiently and economically. Company activities in Manitoba changed. The industrial projects carried on within the Forts gradually declined, replaced by other commercial enterprises.

In 1882, Upper Fort Garry was sold and demolished, leaving only one Gate.

The uses of the Lower Fort after 1870 also reflect the fact that the Red River period of history was over. Between 1870 and the early 1960's, the Lower Fort was used as a training ground for the Northwest Mounted Police. Later, it became the Provincial Penetentiary and for a short period of time was the Lunatic Asylum for the Province.

Still later, it became the summer residence for Company Chief Commissioners and the gracious old buildings welcomed well-known Canadian politicians, businessmen and literary figures.

In 1913, the newly-formed Motor Country Club of Winnipeg leased the Lower Fort from the Hudson's Bay Company and used the premises as a private golf club until the early 1960's.

The Hudson's Bay Company officially presented the title to this ancient property to the Government of Canada in 1951. Parks Canada began extensive plans to restore the Fort to its nineteenth century hey-day. The meticulous research and careful restoration have created a lasting memorial to Manitoba's past.

UPPER AND LOWER FORT GARRY: TODAY

Upper Fort Garry was sacrificed to the city planners' desire for straight streets. All that remains is one Gate. To this Gate, traders brought their furs and provisioned themselves for their long journey; steamboats carried goods -- and people to settle this western land. Later, overland transportation; ox-cart and train, replaced the traditional water routes as carriers of goods and settlers. The bustling, busy Upper Fort was no longer needed as the centre of commerce. Yet the Gate remains -- a symbol of welcome today as it has been for a centruy and a half -- the Gateway to the west.

The Lower Fort was saved by its isolation from commerce and settlement and was destined for a most gracious retirement. Lower Fort Garry National Historic Park stands today much as it did a century ago; a complex of buildings which supported the provisioning of Hudson's Bay Company trading operations. Restoration of the historic buildings was begun by Parks Canada in the early 1960's, restoring the buildings to the years between 1825-1875. Although each building is restored to a different date, the overall impression permits visitors to understand the complexity of the fur trade society and the hardships faced by early settlers.

The Lower Fort is a living museum, standing as the foremost centre for interpreting the history of western Canada's fur trading past to the citizen of today.
